Description

This determination arose from the decision of the authority (acting in its capacity as a building consent authority) to issue a building consent to itself (in its capacity as the owner of the building).

The building consent was for the construction of a new building.

The adequacy of the provisions that were made in the proposed building for access and facilities for people with disabilities were in dispute.

The matter for determination was whether the decision of the authority to issue a building consent for the proposed building was correct, with respect to the provisions that were been made for access and facilities for people with disabilities.
